In perhaps the most curious college announcement in bowling history, 17-year-old PWBA champion and Jr. Team USA member Jillian Martin chose the University of Nebraska as her school of choice, announced on a BowlStreamTV.com live stream November 15.

BowlStreamTV owner Emil Williams, Jr. asked Martin to explain her selection process before she revealed a bright red Cornhusker T shirt. With the poise of a seasoned veteran, Martin walked us through why she wanted to bowl for the Big Ten school in Lincoln. The other three schools considered were McKendree, North Carolina A&T, and Wichita State.

Many soon to be collegians may do a Facebook feed, live or recorded, but to use a major bowling live stream service and an exclusive print/online interview about her college choice with a top independent bowling media outlet 11thframe.com is something you see out of a high touted high school athlete. Martin is certainly at the top of that list as a high school bowler right now.

Whether you see it or not, this is the beginning of marketing of Martin as a brand, something more and more prevalent in the online era. There are other examples of

Does Anybody Really Know When No-Tap Bowling Started?

A couple of bowling publishers recently asked me if I might have any information on the origins of no-tap bowling, a unique form of kegling that rewards a strike when a nine count is rolled on the first shot of any frame. I had never really given it much thought, because for me, no-tap bowling was always there.

In fact, my very first trophy was in a Christmas No-Tap Doubles Tournament with partner Monte Schulz, the eldest son of Charles M. Schulz, the creator of the Peanuts comic strip. The year was 1961, and L & L Lanes in Sebastopol had just opened. It was operated by a couple of loggers, Louie and Lonnie Headrick, who had decided that bowling might be an easier way to make a living.

While I was researching online to try and find information about the origins of no-tap bowling, the lyrics to a famous 1960's song by the pop rock group Chicago kept "popping" up in the search results, and provided some interesting correlations:

Does anybody really know (what no-tap bowling is)

Does anybody really care (when no-tap bowling started)

If so, I can't imagine why (because it's so much fun)

We've all got time enough to (try no-tap bowling)

As a youth I remember when the California Bowling News would arrive at L & L Lanes on Friday afternoon. It was filled with all kinds of tournament activity, including many no-tap events. In my estimation, it would be safe to say that if no-tap bowling did not originate in Southern California, it certainly became an art form in Tinseltown, with the most imaginative and creative forms of tournaments and leagues.

I once again called upon my new friend Bud Horn, who grew up in Los Angeles, and at the age of 84 is probably the best source to ask when no-tap bowling started. "I remember bowling in no-tap tournaments while still in grade school," said Horn. "That would have been in 1949 or 1950 at the Rancho Bowl, an eleven-lane bowling center on Pico Boulevard in West Los Angeles."

My personal memories of no-tap tournaments piqued when I discovered the Hot Pot No-Tap, a fabulous tournament run by bowling promoter Nick Mancini at the 60-lane Grand Central Bowl in Glendale, a suburb of Los Angeles. I have written about my experiences at Grand Central many times. It was the perfect way to spend a Saturday evening whenever my duties while working for AMF would allow.

Everything about Grand Central Bowl was fun, from the difficult lane conditions (that made the no-tap format enjoyable), to the "easy money" that could be had by a No-Tap 300 Insurance option. For an additional $5, each competitor was guaranteed a $100 payoff for every no-tap 300 game rolled during the five-game event.

A special article that I wrote for the California Bowling News in 2017 summed it all up nicely:

"After a couple of weeks I online videos, helping get other pros online facetime to see anytime on demand.

As Martin begins her collegiate career this fall, she will join current NCAA athletes as the first generation to take advantage of the recently enacted NIL legislation passed July 1, 2021. That allows athletes to be compensated for their name, image, and likeness (the first letters of those three words) in individual endorsement deals inside and outside of bowling. What's unclear at this point is if Martin and others can compete under NIL for PBA and/or PWBA prize monies, even if those funds are used in a SMART program. According to NCAA and many university guidelines based on individual state guidelines, monies based on performance are not covered under NIL at the moment, but endorsement and other non-performance related income is allowed.

To put in perspective how unique a case Martin is, she became the youngest winner on the PWBA Tour earlier this year at age 17 years, seven days. Pete Weber made his first PBA television finals at age 17, seven months, winning his first PBA title at age 19. Norm Duke is still the PBA's youngest winner at age 18 and 345 days when he won the 1983 PBA

Cleveland Open. And of course, Anthony Simonson snagged the 2016 USBC Masters five weeks after turning 19 years old. But none of those three bowled collegiately.

Whether Martin is allowed or not to accept prize monies in any form as a NCAA collegiate bowler in the future is unclear now, but I can certainly see her being a face of Generation Alpha bowlers and beyond. I've got a few pending questions for those in the know on the new NIL structure, so when I get clarification on this point, I'll pass that along.

Many athletes are using social media to do what used to be referred to as "getting your name out there," meaning getting it familiar with those within a given common interest group. One series of YouTube videos show a golfer using clubs and balls from different eras versus current equipment, comparing the technology and results of both. (If you get a chance, those are informative.)

Packy Hanrahan has started a group of videos in The House Bowling channel. One video had him locate a 1935 Brunswick Mineralite ball which he plugged, redrilled, and used on a house shot.

Seen here (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JXIBqIFieoY&t=380s>), Hanrahan makes the Mineralite look pretty good on a house shot and describes what ball reaction he is seeing. On a side note, there was a brief shot of the ball on the press getting redrilled. As any other pro shop tech can tell you, there is nothing quite like the unmistakable scent of a ball of that era getting drilled or resurfaced (it's not a thrilling as the scent of peeling rubber spinning donuts in a parking lot, believe me).

Packy visited with former touring pro and U.S Open champ Justin Hromek and later in the video compares the Mineralite to his plastic spare and urethane balls. For players who grew up in the reactive era, it is curious to see the wonderment of what these balls do and don't do. Like other highly skilled players, once he gets lines up, he strikes for awhile.

I would like to see Hanrahan bowl on a wood lane with older patterns, perhaps something in a 28 to 32 foot length common in the late 70s or 26 foot length short oil pattern realized that the Hot Pot side pots were really what this tournament was all about for a scratch bowler. The culmination of my understanding was one eventful night when I rolled four consecutive no-top 300's, and in the fifth game I had the first eleven 'real' strikes before leaving the 6-10 on my last roll.

Within another couple of weeks a lot of local pro's, having read about the 300's, began to show up for the event. Mancini used this as an opportunity to run multiple squads and entries. Top notch players of the day including Fred Conner, Butch Soper, Jack Andolina, Hobo Booth and Phil Kapsimallis, to name a few, would join me in what began to

from the late 80s. The toughest part would be finding the lane oil used at the time. Those oils had much lower viscosity than today's oils.

Currently with 23,000 subscribers, The House Bowling page offers videos going back nearly a year which are well produced and quite entertaining.

Finally, this week, the site of one of Houston's most iconic bowling centers has a new life.

As of this summer, the site of old Palace Lanes on Bellaire Boulevard is now an entertainment center, known as Palace Social. According to its webpage, the venue has eight lanes, arcade, virtual reality games, eSports lounge, and an upper end food beverage menu. If anyone has been to Palace Social,

In the women's division, McKendree began to find its rhythm during the final four traditional games Saturday, averaging more than 208 as a team to hold a 50-pin lead over St. Ambrose heading into Baker competition.

McKendree continued strong during the Baker block Sunday, averaging more than 216 as a team to roll to a 391-pin victory with a 10,366 total.

Mount Mercy moved into second place with 9,975, and Newman finished third with 9,800.

for the Warriors with 1,053, and Lakyn Edwards was fourth with 1,017.

Adrian's Cassandra McCarren was third with 1,034, and Spring Arbor's Mikayla Ponce was fifth with 998.

The Hawk Classic took place at Millsboro Lanes in Millsboro, Delaware, with competition for all three days being broadcast on BowITV.

The tournament featured five five-game Baker matches Friday and five traditional games Saturday to determine seeding for Sunday's bracket, based on total pinfall. All bracket matches featured a best-of-seven Baker format for the 15-team field.

Sam Houston State and Vanderbilt tied for the top spot after the first two days at the Hawk Classic, both finishing with a 10,169 total to set up a first-round bracket match Sunday.

Sam Houston State took the early advantage, 3-1, but Vanderbilt rallied back with consecutive wins to force a deciding game. In Game 7, Sam Houston State started with eight consecutive strikes on the way to a 276-242 victory to advance to the title match, 4-3.

Fairleigh Dickinson, the No. 3 seed, advanced to the finals to face Sam Houston State by defeating North Carolina A&T (4-2) and Vanderbilt (4-3).

In the title match, Sam Houston State averaged 233 to sweep Fairleigh Dickinson, 4-0. The win marked the second consecutive title at the Hawk Classic for the Bearcats and was their fourth victory in the last five editions of the event.

In the individual standings, Sam Houston State's Elise Chambers and Mount St. Mary's Rebecca Dodson tied for the top pinfall totals, each finishing their five-game block Saturday with a 1,128 total (225.6 average).

Duquesne's Olivia Farwell (1,101), Delaware State's Saralyne Nassberg (1,096) and Sam Houston State's Hayley Connelly (1,082) followed in the individual standings.

which is still operated by the Bowlero Corporation today. Manager Bob Liquori would often write to share his phenomenal turnouts, which ranged from 200 to as many 600 entries on any given weekend. He ran a total of 5 squads, two on Saturday (Noon and 2PM) and three on Sunday (Noon, 2PM and 4PM). Liquori would go on to host America's toughest bowling tournament, the Petersen Classic, at AMF Hoffman Lanes in nearby Hoffman Estates, Ill., from 1994 until 2014, when the center closed. (The Petersen Classic continues to this day, and is currently being held at Bowlero Wauwatosa in Wisconsin). What about you?
